

Maa Ko Sab Theek Bataya Tha

Ankita

In a cozy Mumbai apartment, a family of four sits together surrounded by the quiet warmth of home. The thirty-five-year-old mother, Sunita, wearing a simple saree with her black hair tied back, smiles gently beside her twelve-year-old daughter and seven-year-old son. However, forty-year-old Rajesh glances anxiously at his painting business ledgers, realizing that financial loss is quickly catching up to them.

Gathering his family in the living room, Rajesh speaks softly as he proposes a drastic shift in their lives. He suggests leaving the bustling city of Mumbai behind to start fresh in their ancestral village as farmers. The children look on with curious eyes, sensing the seriousness of the moment.

Sunita looks at her husband with deep concern, immediately questioning how this move will impact their children's education and future. Rajesh gently places his hands over hers, looking into her eyes with reassuring warmth. He promises her that everything will work out fine and that she should not worry.

With heavy hearts and packed suitcases, the family prepares to leave their familiar Mumbai home. Together, they bundle up their modest belongings into bags, ready to embark on the journey toward their rural roots.

The family arrives at a quiet rural home surrounded by vast open fields and peaceful farmlands. Sunshine bathes the simple house as the children take in their new natural surroundings with excitement and curiosity.

Under the shade of the village porch, Rajesh pulls Sunita aside for a quiet conversation. He urges her to return to Mumbai alone to find a job, explaining that her income in the city could save them. Sunita turns anxious, wondering who will look after their young children while she is away.

Rajesh speaks with absolute confidence, placing a comforting hand on Sunita's shoulder to dismiss her worries. He assures her warmly that he will personally take care of the household and look after both children. Reluctantly, Sunita agrees, trusting her husband's word completely.

Tears fill Sunita's eyes as she embraces her daughter and son tightly near the village station before departing for Mumbai. She whispers loving words of caution, asking them to stay safe and take care of one another. The children hug her tightly, reluctant to let their mother go.

In the crowded, bustling streets of Mumbai, Sunita works tirelessly day and night, exhausted but deeply motivated. A soft vision of her beloved children stays constantly in her thoughts, driving her to endure every hardship for their sake.

Far away in the village, a painful reality unfolds in stark contrast to Sunita's hard work. While the two children sit alone at home neglected, Rajesh secretly gambles away the money Sunita sends, calling her only to ask for more.
