

JJ and the Dino Brain Detectives

Ashley

JJ loved dinosaurs. Big dinosaurs. Tiny dinosaurs. Dinosaurs that stomped. Dinosaurs that roared.

One day, JJ felt funny. His body felt strange.
His head felt fuzzy.

Mom and Dad held his hands. "We're going to the doctors," they said.

The doctors were kind. The doctors were gentle. They wanted to listen to JJ's brain.

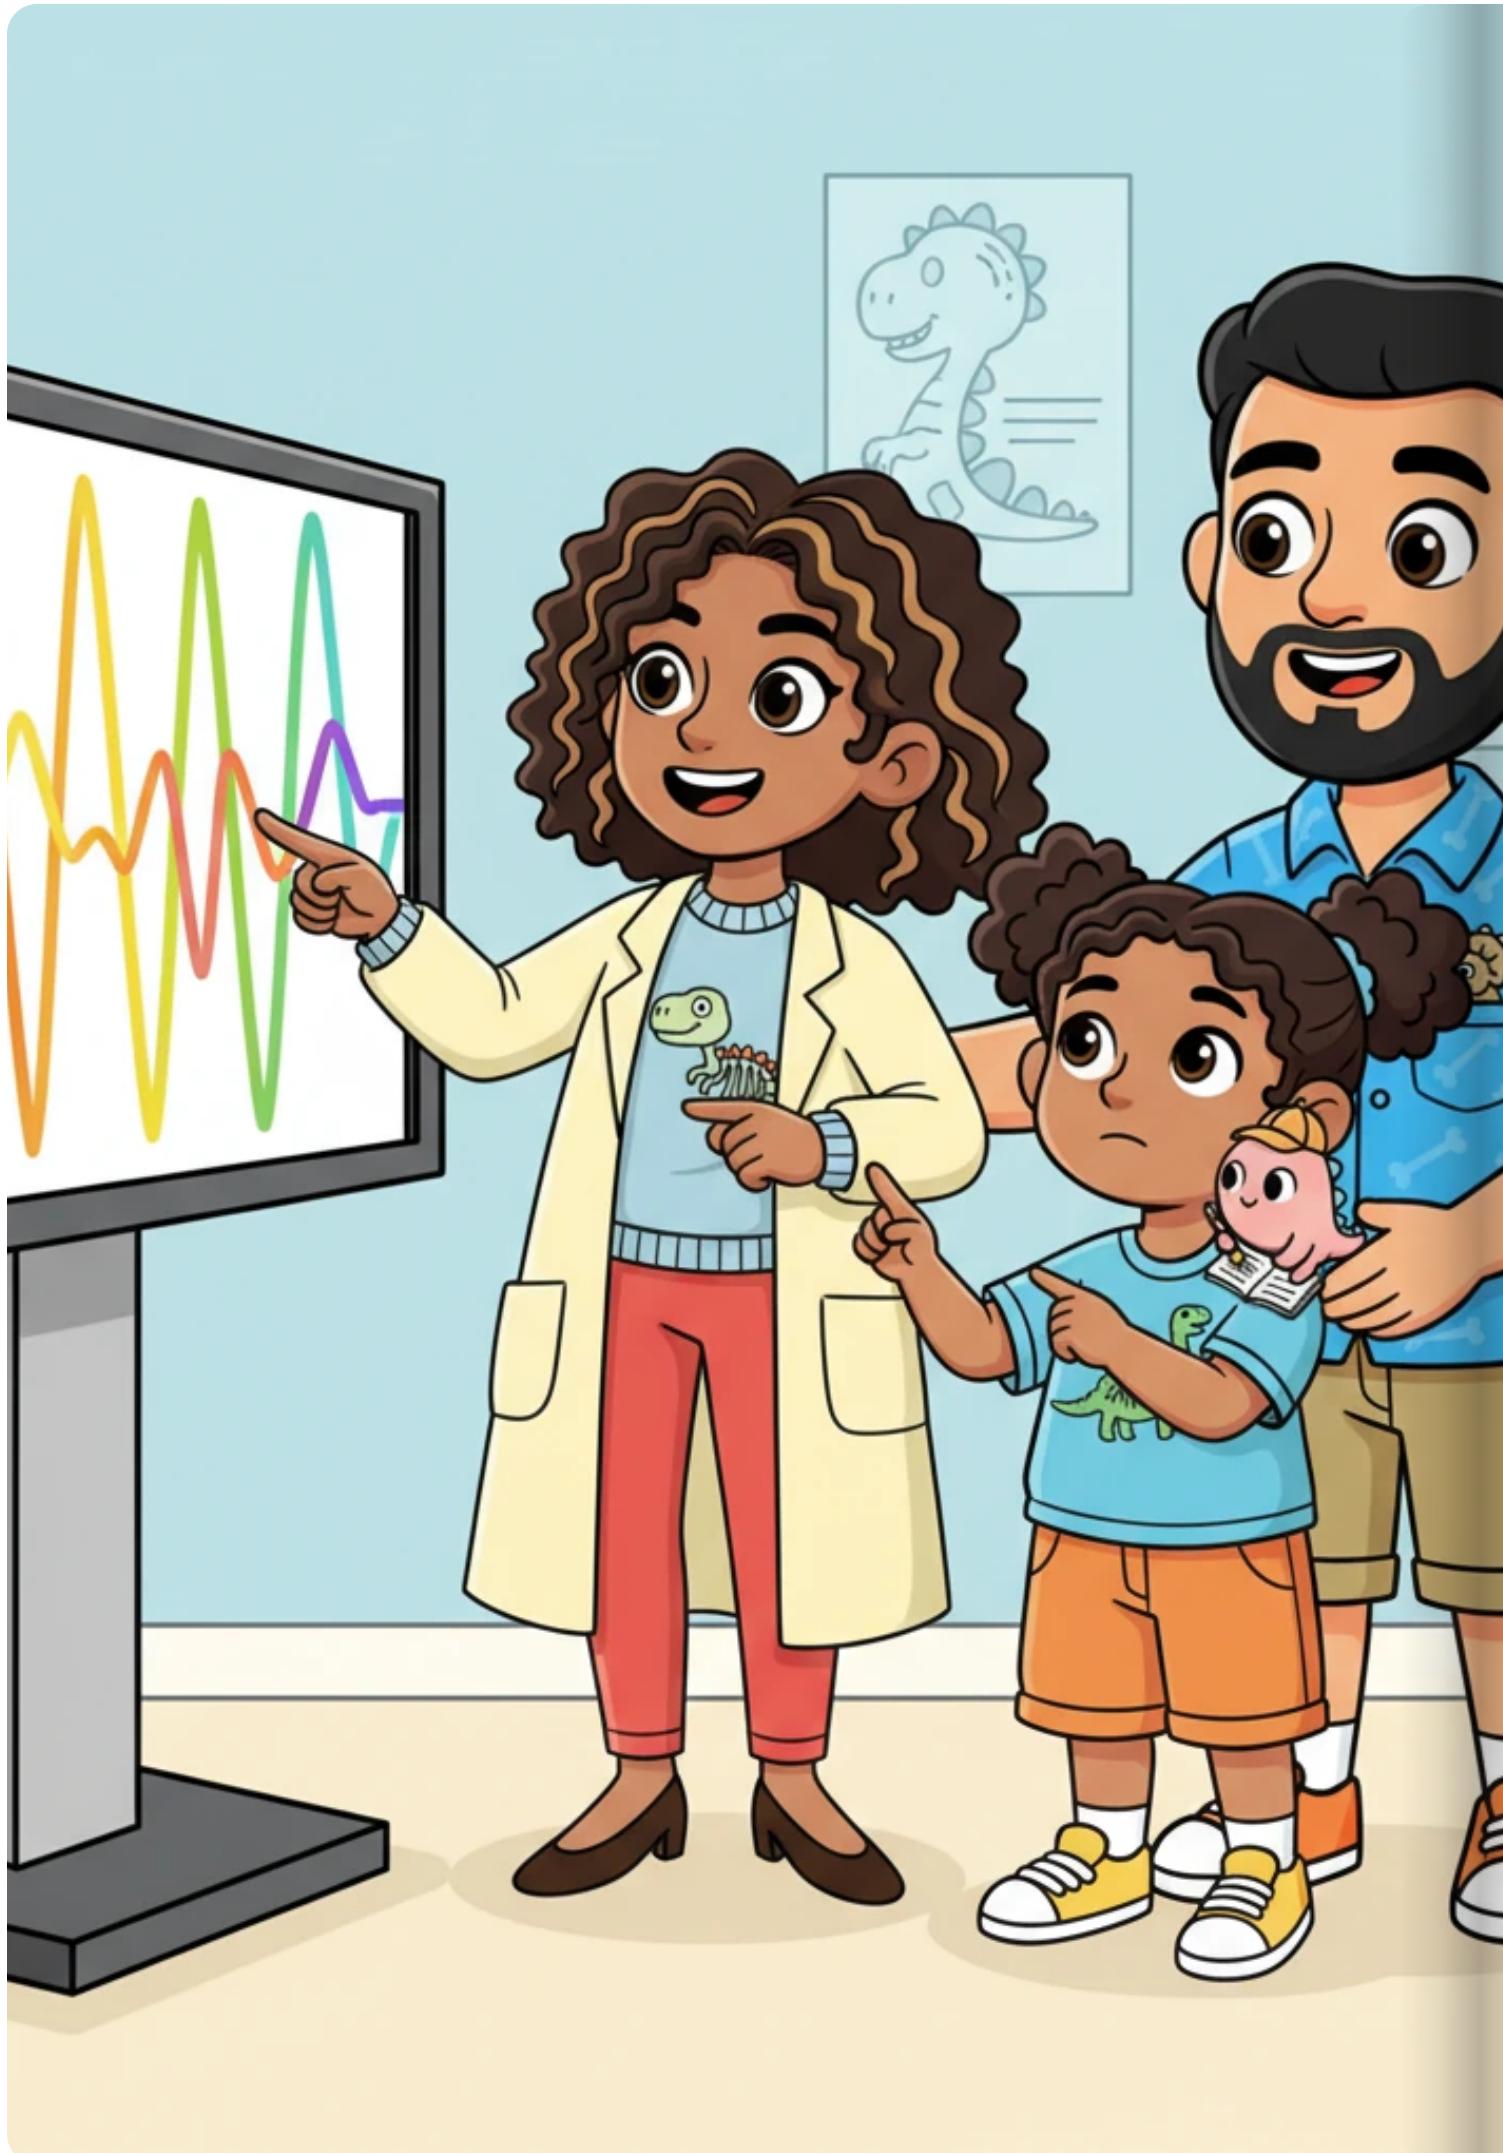

"We're going to do an EEG," said the doctor. EEG? JJ wondered. It was not scary at all, just a little tickly.

Suddenly, JJ imagined the little sensors on his head weren't just wires. They were his very own Dino Brain Detectives! Each one was a tiny, colorful dinosaur, peeking out to listen closely to the whispers inside his brain.

The Dino Detectives were busy, sending secret messages down their wires. They were searching for special brain waves, which JJ imagined as wobbly, glowing lines that looked like baby dinosaurs dancing.

When the EEG was done, the doctor looked at the pictures. "Your brain waves are mostly super strong and happy," she said, "but we see a tiny wobbly spot that needs a little extra help."

The doctor explained that some special medicine would help the wobbly spot feel stronger and steadier. JJ felt brave, knowing his Dino Brain Detectives had found the secret, and the medicine would be their helper.

Soon, JJ's head didn't feel fuzzy anymore! He played with his dinosaur toys, knowing his amazing brain was strong and healthy, thanks to his caring doctors and his clever Dino Brain Detectives.
