

Ria, Rohan and Reema and the Talking Dustbins

The Three Dustbins

Vaishaly Chudasama

Ria, Rohan, and Reema skip happily through the entrance of their favorite park, ready for a day of fun and games under the warm sun.

Near the park gate, the three friends stop in their tracks when they spot three giant, brightly colored dustbins they have never seen before.

Rohan points his finger at each one and counts out loud, noticing a vibrant green bin, a deep blue bin, and a bright yellow bin standing in a row.

Reema tilts her head in confusion as the children wonder why the park needs three different bins instead of just one.

Suddenly, the green dustbin develops a friendly face and explains that it is for reducing waste, helping everyone use less plastic and paper to keep the Earth happy.

The blue dustbin begins to speak with a cheerful voice, telling the children that it loves items that can be reused, like turning old boxes into wonderful new toys.

The yellow dustbin joins the conversation, explaining that it collects things to be recycled, where old cans and bottles are transformed into brand new treasures.

Inspired by their new friends, Ria, Rohan, and Reema look around the grass and find three plastic bottles, three pieces of paper, and three metal cans.

With big smiles, the children carefully place each item into the correct colored bin, watching as the park begins to look clean and beautiful again.

The three friends and the three talking dustbins cheer together in the sparkling clean park, celebrating their promise to protect the planet every single day.
