

Barnaby's Big Day of Blunders

Kathleen Lopez

Barnaby the Bulldozer arrives at the construction site ready for work, but he has accidentally put on a giant, polka-dot bowtie instead of his safety belt. The other trucks giggle as he tries to look very professional while pushing a pile of colorful, oversized building blocks instead of heavy rocks.

Dizzy the Cement Mixer is having a bubbly disaster because she was accidentally filled with liquid soap instead of concrete. Every time her drum spins, massive, shimmering bubbles float across the site, turning the serious work zone into a giant, sudsy party that smells like lavender.

Tallulah the Crane decides that lifting heavy steel beams is far too repetitive, so she attaches a giant magnet to her hook to play extreme fishing in a nearby pond. She successfully catches an old bicycle and a very confused rubber ducky, showing off her prize to the cheering crew.

Flatley the Steamroller finds a massive mound of pizza dough left behind by the site's hungry lunch caterers and decides to help out. He rolls over the dough with a rhythmic thump, flattening it into the world's largest pizza crust that perfectly covers the entire foundation of the new building.

Digby the Excavator is convinced he has discovered a rare dinosaur bone deep in the earth, but it turns out to be a giant, prehistoric-sized silver spoon. He uses his new treasure to serve dirt-pudding to the other trucks, who all pretend to take giant, clanking bites of the pretend dessert.

A row of bright orange traffic cones decides they are tired of standing still and begins a perfectly choreographed synchronized dance routine. They hop and spin around a very confused foreman, who can't understand why his No Entry sign has been replaced with a Disco Zone poster.

Dumpster Dave the Dump Truck travels to the quarry for a load of gravel but accidentally backs into a toy factory's delivery bay by mistake. When he tips his bed at the construction site, thousands of colorful bouncy balls cascade out, sending the hard-hatted workers chasing them in every direction.

The blueprints for the new library get mixed up with a child's fantasy coloring book, leading the confused crew to try and build a giant castle with a dragon-shaped chimney. Barnaby stares at the plans, wondering where they are supposed to find enough glitter to finish the moat-sized swimming pool.

Instead of a heavy iron wrecking ball, the demolition crane is accidentally equipped with a giant, sparkling disco ball. As it swings toward an old wall, it doesn't break a single brick but instead casts spinning lights everywhere, turning the dusty construction site into a glittering ballroom.

As the sun begins to set over the site, the trucks realize they haven't built a single straight wall, but they have created the world's most magnificent playground. They all park in a cozy circle, sharing a laugh about their silly day before falling asleep under the stars to dream of tomorrow's blunders.