

Leo's Green Footprints

Alizon Salinas Carrillo

Leo looked at his cluttered room and decided to make a big change for the planet. He gathered all his old plastic toys and cardboard boxes, realizing how much waste he had accumulated. With a bright smile, he promised to practice the three Rs every single day.

First, Leo reduced his waste by choosing a reusable metal flask instead of plastic bottles. He filled it with cold water before heading out to the sunny park. He has already saved dozens of disposable bottles this week through this simple habit.

At the local grocery store, Leo proudly refused the plastic bags offered at the counter. He brought his own colorful cloth tote bags from home to carry the fresh apples. His small choice has prevented unnecessary plastic from reaching the ocean.

Back home, Leo found a creative way to reuse things instead of throwing them away. He turned an empty glass jam jar into a beautiful, hand-painted pencil holder. He has successfully transformed several pieces of trash into useful bedroom treasures.

Later that afternoon, Leo patched up his favorite pair of denim jeans instead of buying new ones. He carefully sewed a bright green dinosaur patch over the small tear on the knee. He has extended the life of his clothes with just a little thread and imagination.

In the kitchen, Leo sorted the remaining waste into the proper bins to ensure everything was recycled correctly. He separated the clean aluminum cans from the paper packaging with great care. He has learned exactly which materials can be reborn into new products.

Leo then carried a bucket of organic vegetable scraps out to the wooden bin in the backyard. He has started a rich compost pile that will soon feed the garden soil. The orange peels and eggshells will turn into black gold for his mother's roses.

To share his passion, Leo invited his neighborhood friends over to show them his green projects. He explained how much fun it was to protect the earth through simple daily routines. He has inspired three of his closest friends to start their own recycling bins.

The next morning, Leo walked along the community beach with a large canvas sack. He collected stray plastic wrappers and bottles that careless visitors had left behind. He has cleared a wide path of sand, making it safe for the sea turtles.

Leo stood on a hilltop at sunset, looking down at his clean, beautiful town. He felt a deep sense of pride in his heart for the efforts he had made. He has proven that even a young child can make a massive difference for the world.
