

The Kind Prophet and the Great Ark

Fatma

Long ago, in a dusty desert village, a kind man named Nuh spoke to his neighbors with a heart full of love. He gently asked them to remember their Creator and be kind to one another, his presence glowing with a soft, peaceful light.

Despite his gentle words, many people turned away and began to laugh, pointing fingers at the humble man. Nuh did not get angry; instead, he bowed his head and prayed for patience, standing firm in his belief even when he felt alone.

One day, a special message came, instructing Nuh to build a massive wooden ark right there in the middle of the dry desert. He gathered his tools and began to work, his hands moving with purpose as the giant structure started to take shape.

The villagers gathered around the construction site, mocking the sight of a huge boat surrounded by nothing but sand. They shouted jokes and asked how a boat could ever sail on dust, but Nuh simply stayed focused on his task.

As the ark neared completion, a wondrous sight appeared as animals of all shapes and sizes began to arrive in pairs. From tall elephants to tiny rabbits, they walked calmly toward the wooden doors, guided by a mysterious and peaceful force.

Suddenly, the bright blue sky turned a deep, heavy grey, and the first giant drops of rain began to splash onto the parched earth. Nuh called out one last time, inviting everyone to join him in safety as the clouds grew thicker.

The rain poured down until the desert was replaced by a vast, shimmering ocean that covered the hills. The great wooden ark lifted off the ground, floating steadily and safely above the rising waves while the world turned into a sea of blue.

Inside the ark, there was a sense of profound peace and warmth as the animals rested side by side. Nuh looked after every creature with care, thanking the Almighty for their protection while the storm raged outside.

Finally, the rain stopped and the sun broke through the clouds, revealing a magnificent rainbow stretching across the horizon. The ark came to a gentle rest on a high mountain peak, signaling that the earth was ready for a fresh start.

As the animals stepped out onto the lush green land, Nuh looked up at the sky with a heart full of gratitude. He had shown that with patience and faith, even the biggest storms can be weathered, leading to a bright and beautiful new beginning.
