

The Potty Princess of Nessia

Urvashi Butani

In the heart of the lush, magical kingdom of Nessia, the sun shines brightly over towering emerald trees and sparkling waterfalls. Little Princess Nessa stands proudly in her royal garden, her golden crown shimmering under the warm jungle sun.

Nessa is never alone, for her best friend Leo the lion is always by her side with a gentle nuzzle. Right in the middle of her enchanted palace sits a tiny, bright pink potty, waiting for its royal moment.

Despite her royal crown, Nessa has a little secret hidden beneath her colorful dress. She still wears a big, crinkly, soggy diaper that makes a swish-swish sound whenever she skips through the palace halls.

Leo the lion looks at the diaper and gives a soft, encouraging roar. He tells Nessa that while she is a wonderful princess, true princesses don't need diapers because they use their special potties.

Suddenly, a tiny glowing light flutters down from a giant banana leaf, sparkling like a fallen star. It is Fern the Fairy, a magical jungle spirit with wings that shimmer in every color of the rainbow.

Fern whispers a wonderful secret to Nessa, her voice sounding like tinkling bells. She explains that every time Nessa uses her pink potty, a brand new, magical flower will bloom somewhere in the jungle.

Feeling inspired and very brave, Nessa takes a deep breath and marches toward her little pink potty. She knows she can do it, and Leo watches with a proud smile as she sits down all by herself.

Suddenly, a chorus of pop, pop, pop echoes through the palace as three magnificent tropical flowers burst into bloom. Nessa's eyes widen with wonder, and Leo lets out a joyful roar of celebration!

As the days go by, Nessa practices using her potty more and more, and the jungle becomes a sea of vibrant blossoms. The crinkly diapers are gone forever, replaced by the beautiful scent of a thousand new flowers.

Nessa twirls in her garden, her crown straight and her heart full of pride. She is no longer just a princess; she is a brave Potty Princess who helped her kingdom grow more beautiful every single day.