

The Green Guardians of Vietnam

by Sơn Lâm Nguyễn Trần

Mai, a bright and energetic teenager, lived in a small village nestled beside a lush green forest. She loved exploring the vibrant ecosystem, but she noticed the forest was slowly disappearing due to deforestation. She knew something had to be done to protect her home.

One sunny morning, Mai gathered her friends, Linh, Nam, and Hoa. They decided to become the 'Green Guardians' of their village. Their first mission was to learn about ecological restoration and how to bring the forest back to life. They started by researching the types of trees that used to grow there.

The Green Guardians learned about sustainable development. They understood that they needed to protect the forest while also helping their community. They decided to promote ethical sourcing by encouraging local businesses to use eco-friendly materials and reduce waste.

Mai and her friends visited a local farm to learn about regenerative agriculture. They were amazed to see how farmers could grow food without harming the soil. They decided to start a small garden in their village, using regenerative methods to grow vegetables.

The teenagers organized a community event to raise awareness about decarbonisation. They explained how reducing carbon emissions could help protect the environment. They encouraged everyone to cycle, use public transport, and plant trees to help the planet.

After months of hard work, the Green Guardians saw their efforts bear fruit. The forest began to regrow, the village was cleaner, and the community was more aware of environmental issues. Mai and her friends smiled, knowing they had made a real difference and set an example for others.
