

I Really Matter to My Father and King!

by BoomBees Bloc

Elara lived in a small, shadowed orphanage, often feeling invisible. She spent her days helping with chores, but her heart ached for a sense of belonging and purpose. One day, while gazing out of the window, she wished she truly mattered.

A wise old woman, the caretaker, noticed Elara's sadness and told her about the King's kindness. The caretaker explained that everyone in the kingdom, no matter their circumstances, was precious to the King. Elara listened with wide eyes, hope beginning to bloom in her chest.

That night, Elara dreamed she was in a beautiful castle garden. A kind, regal figure, radiant and smiling, approached her. It was the King, who knew her name and called her his dear child. The King embraced her.

The next morning, Elara felt a change within. Remembering the dream, she decided to be braver and kinder. She helped a younger child who was crying, and when another child teased her, she responded with a smile, showing more patience.

Word of Elara's kindness spread. The caretaker smiled, seeing her transformation. Elara began to realize that she was valuable, not because of what she did, but because of who she was, a beloved child of the King.

Elara, with a renewed spirit, continued to spread love and kindness throughout the orphanage. She knew, deep in her heart, that she truly mattered to her Father and King, and that knowledge filled her with joy and confidence. She found strength in loving herself and in knowing that she was loved.
