

Ming-ming's Enduring Love

Samantha Louis

Three sisters, Samantha (17), Sharon (16), and Darlene (14), beam with joy as they hold a tiny, fluffy white rabbit in their arms. They are in a cozy living room, bathed in warm sunlight, with a basket of fresh vegetables nearby.

Ming-ming, now a little bigger, hops playfully around the sisters in a vibrant green backyard. Samantha gently pets his head, Sharon giggles as he nibbles a carrot, and Darlene sketches him in a notebook, capturing his lively spirit.

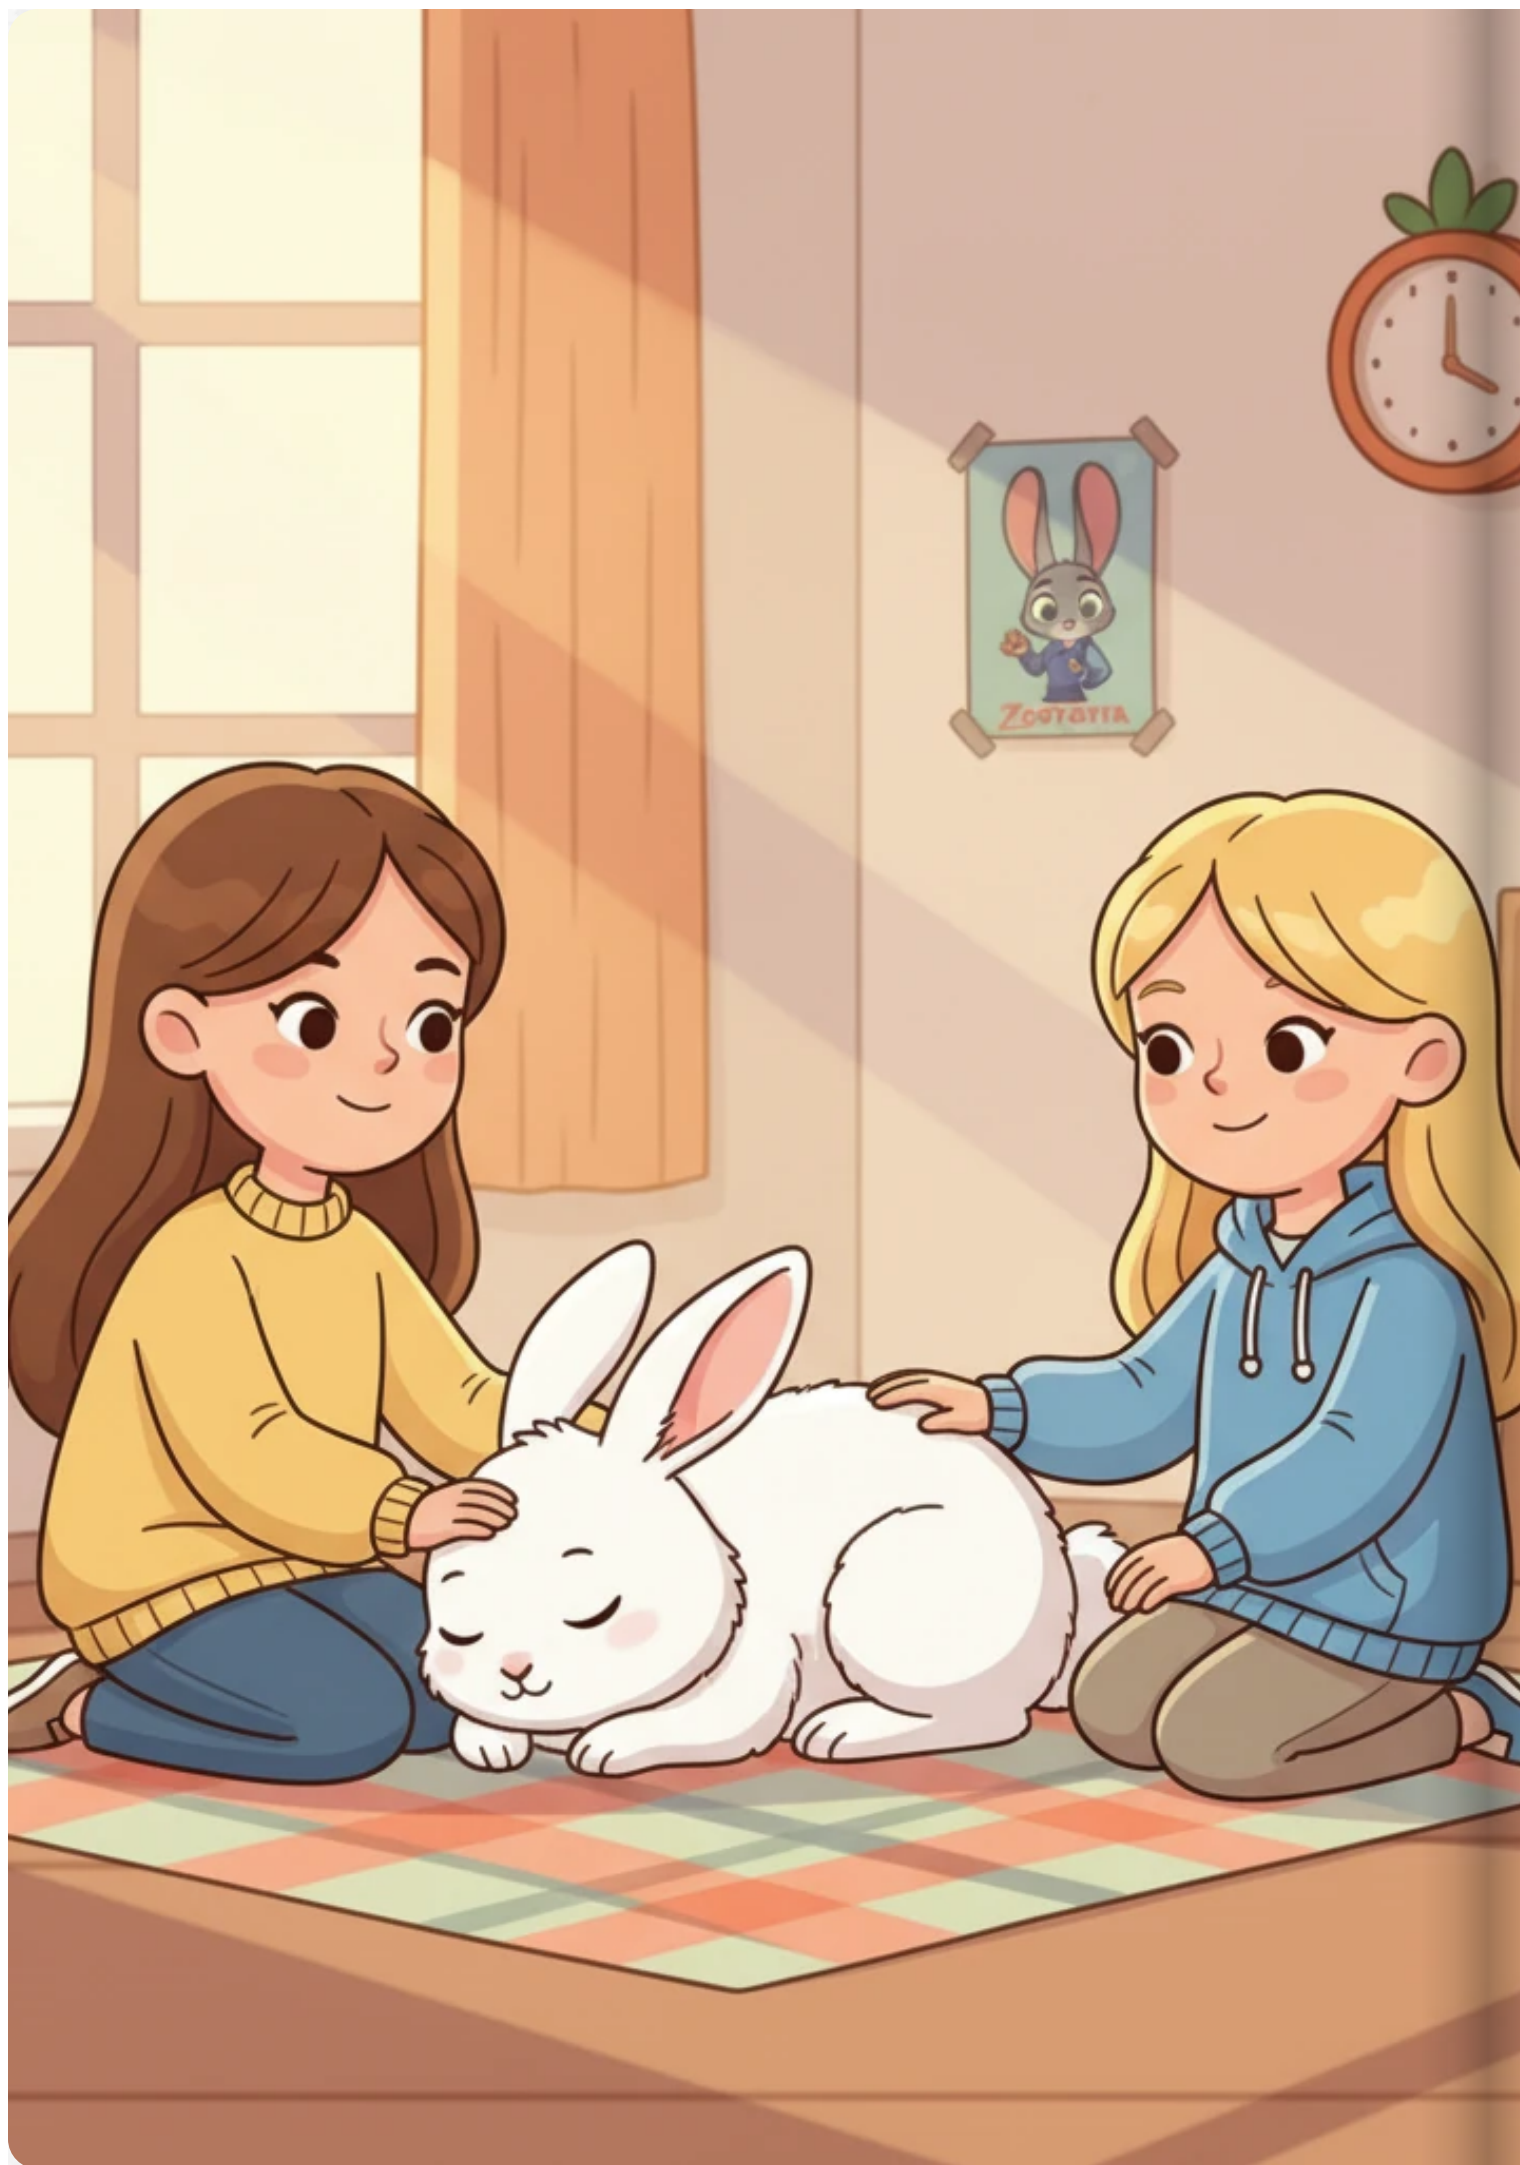

As Ming-ming grows, he becomes an integral part of the family. He sits comfortably on the sofa between Samantha and Sharon as they read, and Darlene shares her snacks with him, a picture of domestic bliss and shared affection.

The sisters are seen celebrating Ming-ming's birthday with a small, rabbit-friendly cake and colorful decorations. Ming-ming, wearing a tiny party hat, looks content surrounded by his loving family.

Years pass, and Ming-ming, now a mature rabbit, is seen napping peacefully in a sunbeam. The sisters, a little older themselves, watch him with gentle smiles, cherishing the quiet moments with their beloved pet.

One day, Ming-ming appears weak and less active. The sisters gather around him, their faces filled with concern and sadness, gently stroking his fur as he rests on a soft blanket.

The sisters are heartbroken as they sit together, tears in their eyes, mourning Ming-ming's passing. A small, empty pet bed sits nearby, emphasizing the void he has left.

In a peaceful garden, the sisters bury Ming-ming under a beautiful flowering tree. They place a small, hand-painted stone with his name on it, a tender farewell to their dear friend.

Years later, the sisters, now grown women, visit the tree where Ming-ming is buried. They share fond memories and gentle smiles, remembering the joy and love he brought into their lives.

The final scene shows a vibrant, whimsical drawing of Ming-ming, healthy and happy, surrounded by glowing hearts. The sisters, young again, are depicted playfully interacting with him, symbolizing that his memory and love live on forever in their hearts.
