

Jessica and Laura's Trampoline Adventure

by Daniella Adeyemo

Jessica, with long, dark hair, and Laura, with her beautiful, dark skin, skipped hand-in-hand toward the bright colors of the trampoline park. The park buzzed with laughter and excited shouts as kids bounced and flipped in the air. Their hearts leaped with anticipation for a day filled with fun and daring leaps.

Suddenly, they found a small bird, its wing bent, lying beneath a big oak tree in the park. Its tiny body trembled. Jessica and Laura, concerned, knelt beside the bird, their faces filled with worry.

They carefully carried the bird home, placing it gently in a cozy box. Every day, they prayed for the bird's recovery, whispering words of encouragement. They talked about how they can help the little bird, hoping the bird will get well soon.

Days turned into weeks, and the girls continued their heartfelt prayers. They watched over the bird, providing water and tiny seeds, their belief unwavering. Then, one sunny afternoon, the bird began to flutter its wings.

With a joyous leap, the bird soared into the sky, its wing perfectly healed. It landed gently on Jessica's shoulder, then on Laura's, chirping happily. Their hearts were filled with happiness.

Smiling widely, Jessica and Laura realized the power of their shared faith and kindness. They told all their friends, reminding them to always pray and believe in the good of the world. They knew they would always remember this special adventure, together.
