

Luma's Little Light

by M Faizan Khan

Far away in the vast night sky, nestled among twinkling constellations, lived a tiny star named Luma. Her light was very dim compared to her sparkling neighbors. She often wished she could shine as brightly as the other stars.

Every evening, Luma watched the other stars twinkle and dance. She tried her best to shine, but her light remained faint. She felt a pang of sadness because the children on Earth couldn't see her.

One night, feeling disheartened, Luma decided to embark on a journey. She zipped past shooting stars, waved at sleepy clouds, and wondered if she'd ever find a way to shine brighter.

Lumamet Orion, a wise old star, during her travels. He listened to her woes and gently reminded her that even the smallest light can guide someone in the dark. His words offered her a glimmer of hope.

Luma continued her journey and soon noticed a small house below with a young girl looking sad. The little girl was afraid of the dark because the village had lost its power, and everything was dim.

Luma focused all her energy, and her tiny light began to flicker brighter and brighter. It streamed down to the girl's window, bringing a warm glow of comfort. The girl smiled, feeling safe and secure.
