

The Glitch in the Feed

by Rayan Fakhouri

Maya scrolled through her phone, her face lit by the glow of the screen. A new Instagram account, 'The Post', had sprung up, and everyone at school was following it. Whispers filled the hallways about its latest post, a fabricated rumor about two classmates.

The rumor spread like wildfire, fueled by anonymous comments and speculation. Maya watched as friendships began to fracture, and the atmosphere at school grew tense. She felt a knot of unease in her stomach, knowing the damage the false information was causing.

Driven by curiosity and a desire to understand, Maya decided to investigate the source of 'The Post'. She spent hours online, searching for clues and trying to uncover the identity of the account's creator. The digital world felt like a maze.

Maya discovered a pattern in the account's posts, a subtle targeting of specific students. She realized the creator was someone who wanted to cause harm. With a heavy heart, she knew she had to find a way to stop it.

Maya decided to use her own platform to speak out against the rumors. She posted a heartfelt message, urging her classmates to think critically and to choose kindness over gossip. Her post gained traction, and slowly, the tide began to turn.

The fake account was eventually exposed, and the truth came out. Maya and her friends learned a valuable lesson about the power of words and the importance of supporting each other. The school returned to a place of friendship and understanding, with a newfound respect for online responsibility.
