

Sarah's Speedy Adventure

by Emma Sweeney

Sarah, a bright-eyed teenager, gazed longingly at the cars on the road, dreaming of the day she could drive. Every day, she'd beg her parents to let her practice, her eagerness bubbling over. Her parents would always tell her to slow down and be patient.

Sarah's dream finally came true! On her birthday, she received a shiny, red car and a driver's license. She was ecstatic, eager to experience the freedom of the open road and ditch the backseat driver, her mother.

With a grin, Sarah set off, exploring the town's winding roads. She relished the feeling of control, the wind in her hair, and the thrill of the speed. She pushed the limits, testing how fast she could go.

Sarah was so focused on the speedometer that she forgot some of the basic rules of the road. She was busy checking her speed and forgetting to look both ways before turning at an intersection.

Lost in her thoughts, Sarah pulled out into an intersection, her heart pounding with the rush of the speed. She didn't see the massive ute filled with dirt barreling towards her from the side.

Suddenly, a deafening CRASH! The world spun as the ute slammed into Sarah's car, sending both vehicles spinning. The impact was violent, and everything went dark.

When Sarah opened her eyes, she was surrounded by flashing lights and worried faces. She felt a mix of fear and regret as she surveyed the damage. She learned a very valuable lesson that day.

Ever since the accident, Sarah gained a newfound respect for driving, her mother's advice, and the importance of insurance. She understood that freedom comes with responsibility, and that safety is always the most important thing.
