

Count Von Poke's New Calling

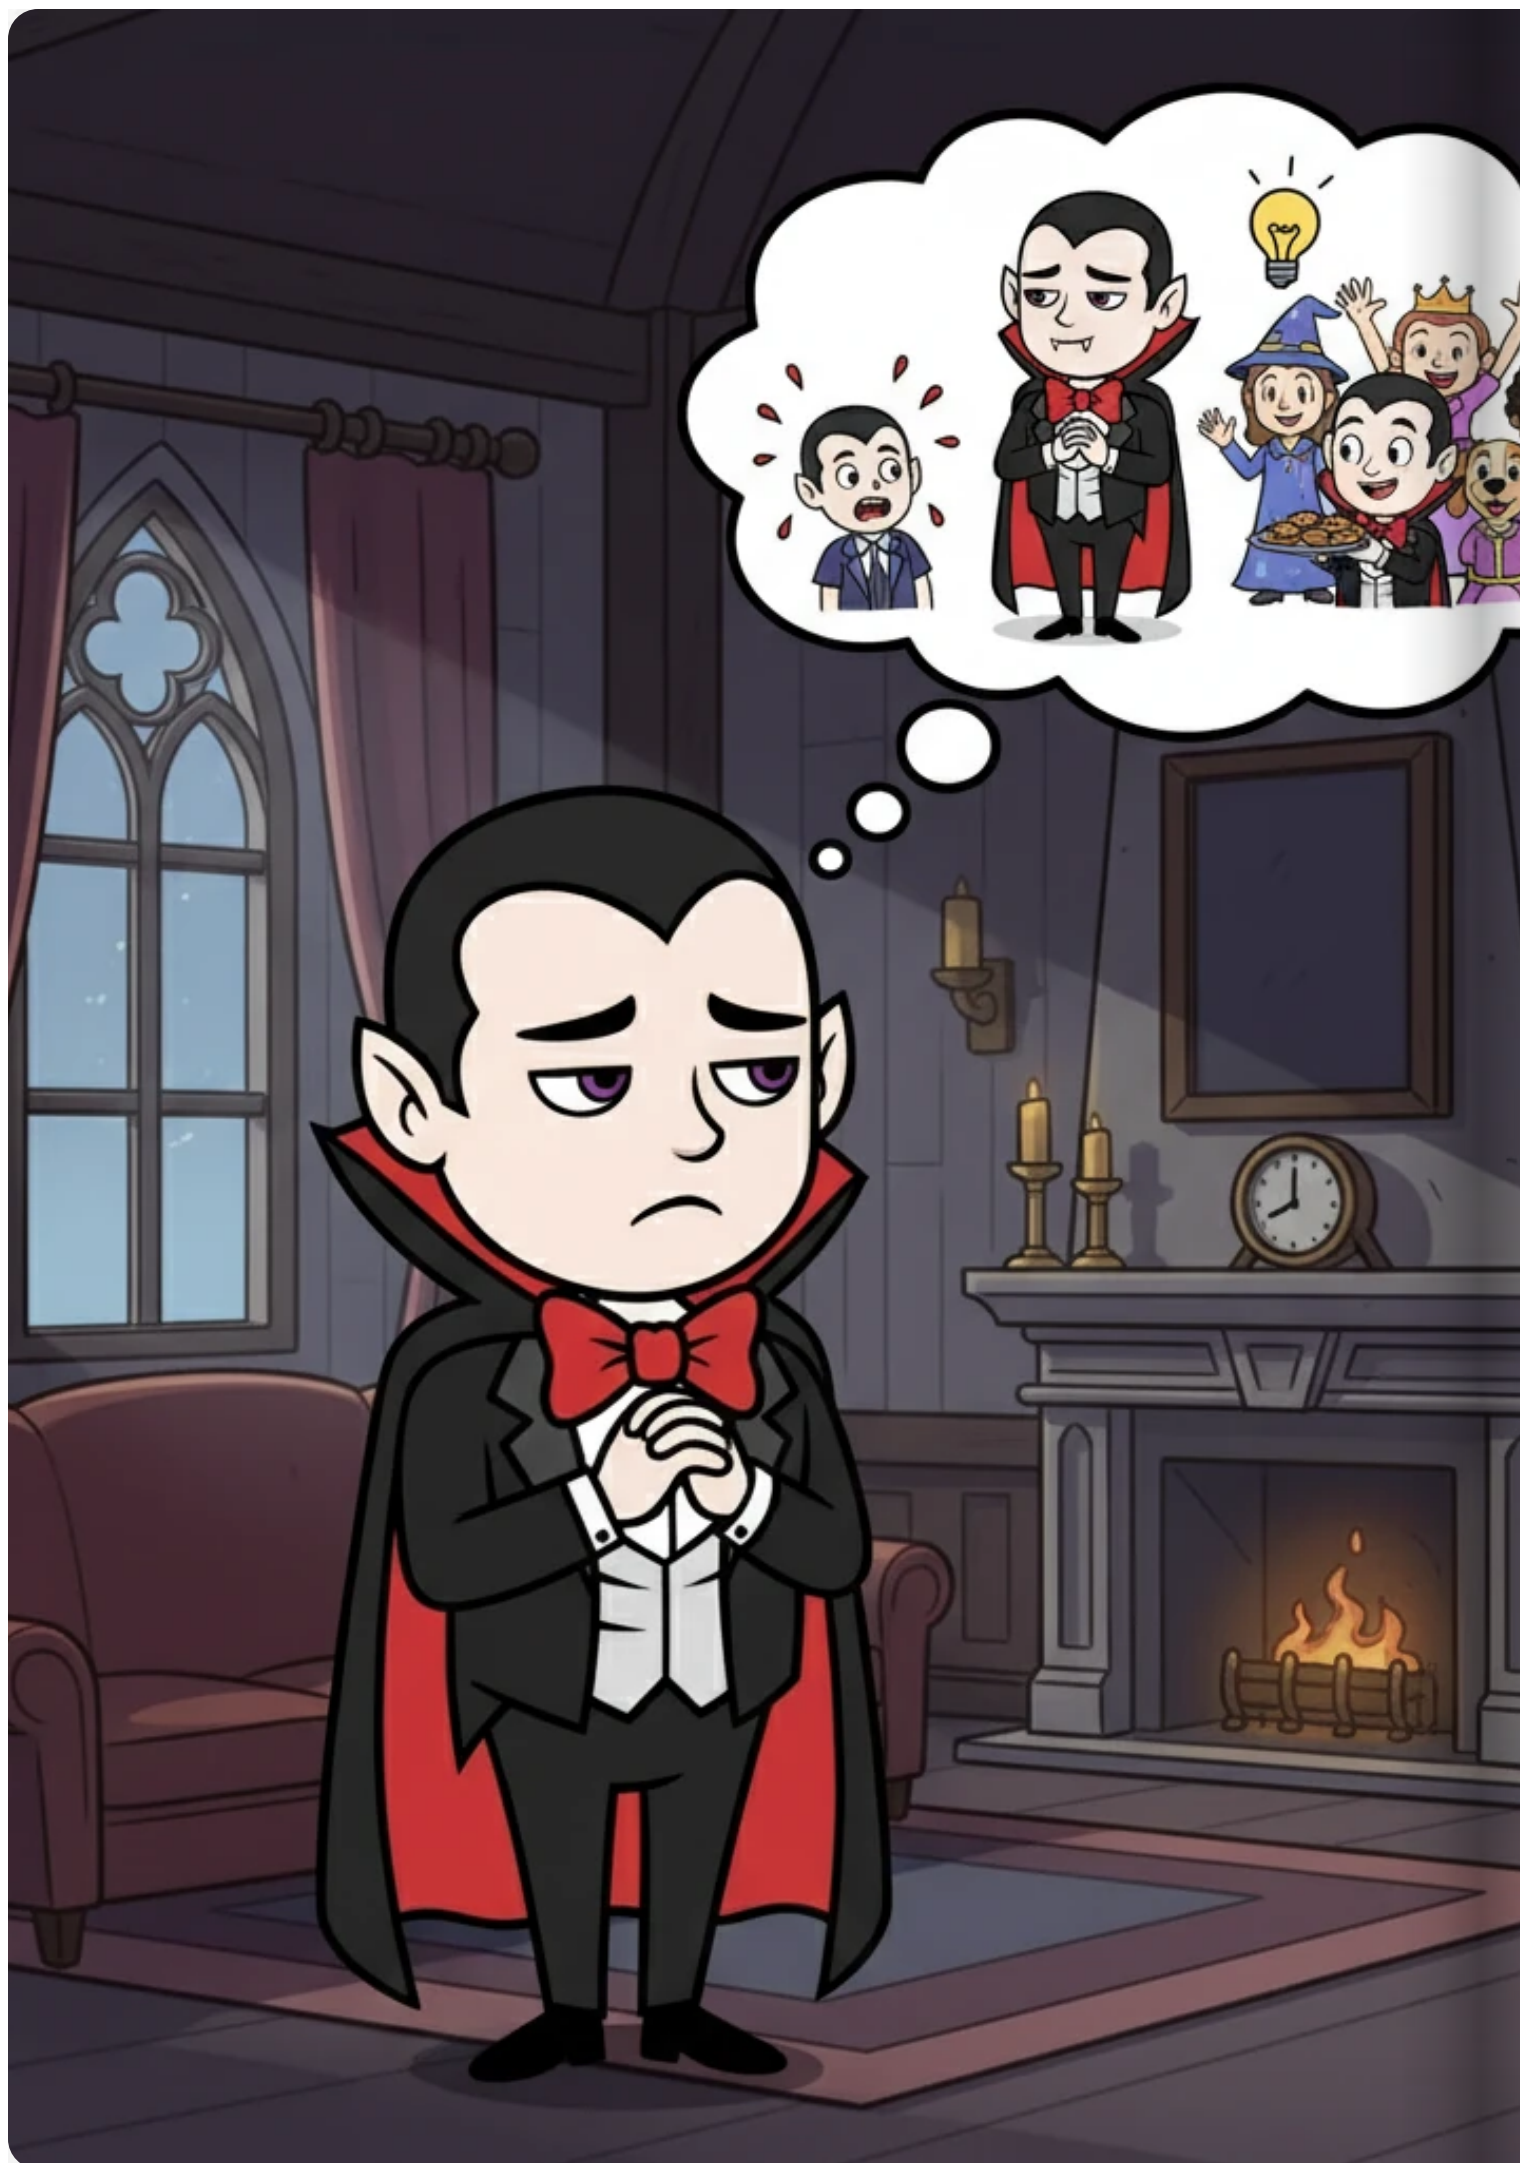

by Joey Thyne

Count Von Poke, a charming vampire with pale skin and a friendly grin, wished for friends. He lived a simple life, but he always felt a little lonely, especially when the monsters had parties. He longed to be included in the group photos.

During monster gatherings, Count Von Poke always felt left out. He was never invited, and he wondered why. He knew he wasn't trying to offend anyone, but he still couldn't understand why.

Realization dawned upon Count Von Poke: his lifestyle choices weren't exactly conducive to making friends. He realized that sucking blood might not be the best way to make a great first impression. He knew he needed to change.

Count Von Poke pondered how he could draw blood without using his fangs. Then, he learned about the VA-BC™, a vascular access credentialing. This was his chance to prove his potential and become someone people could trust.

Count Von Poke studied diligently, learning everything about central lines, PICCs, and infection prevention. He focused on patient protection, knowing it was the most important aspect of his new career. He answered 150 questions to get his certification.

Count Von Poke passed the test and found success! Now, he is a credentialed phlebotomist, and his skills are highly sought after. He made many friends, and he's invited to all the parties!
