

Ben's Big Campfire Cook-Off

by Асель Болысбаева

It was a sunny day in early June when Ben and his friend decided to go camping by the river. They found a perfect little campsite and began setting up their tents. The air was filled with the sounds of birds and the gentle rush of the water.

After the tents were up, they decided to explore the nearby woods to find some firewood. They gathered sticks and branches, laughing as they imagined their campfire. Ben already had a twinkle in his eye, planning a special meal.

Once the campfire was crackling, Ben rummaged through their food bags. He announced he was going to cook something 'special.' He pulled out eggs, peas, a pork pie, and a can of salmon, a quirky assortment of ingredients.

Ben mixed all the ingredients into a large pot, adding salt, pepper, and a generous helping of flour. He stirred it all together, watching with a thoughtful expression. The aroma started to change, and the friends exchanged curious glances.

After ten minutes, the stew emitted a strange smell, and the pot started to bubble. Ben watched intently, then declared it might just need more time. Suddenly, with a loud 'POP,' the stew exploded, splattering everywhere!

Deciding to be safe, they threw the explosive stew away. Laughing, they went to the shop for instant noodles. The pot survived the ordeal, a testament to their hilarious and memorable camping trip.
