

Aria's K-Pop Dream

by Hilda Reyna

Aria, a bright-eyed six-year-old, sat cross-legged on her fluffy pink rug, a giant TV screen filling her world. Her eyes sparkled with excitement as her favorite K-Pop movie began. She knew all the words and moves, ready to become a star.

The screen showed a dazzling stage. Aria, clutching her sparkly microphone, imagined herself as the lead singer, her bedroom transformed into a vibrant concert hall. The music began, and she was immediately swept up into the moment, her heart soaring.

Suddenly, Aria wasn't just in her bedroom anymore. She was on the stage with the K-Pop stars! Lights flashed, music blasted, and she danced along perfectly, her smile as bright as the stage lights. It was everything she'd ever dreamed of.

After the song ended, Aria's friends, Mia and Leo, appeared, as if teleported from the audience. They cheered and praised her amazing performance, and Aria felt a warmth spread through her, a mix of happiness and pride.

Aria, Mia, and Leo now formed their own K-Pop group, dancing and singing their hearts out in Aria's living room. They giggled and helped each other with the moves, their bond growing stronger with every perfectly timed step.

As the movie ended, Aria slowly returned to her own room, a soft smile on her face. The dream faded, but the feeling of joy and the love for music lingered, making her feel even more determined to pursue her singing and dancing goals.
