

The Camping Catastrophe

by Амина Бакирова

It was early June when Barnaby and his friends, Pip and Rosie, arrived at the campsite. Excited, they began to set up their tent near the shimmering river. Unfortunately, the tent stubbornly refused to cooperate, looking more like a floppy sock than a sturdy shelter.

With the tent proving troublesome, Barnaby, Pip, and Rosie decided to explore. They wandered into the woods, hoping to find some interesting treasures. They stumbled upon interesting odd and ends: a lost shoe and a colorful feather.

As dusk settled, the friends started preparing dinner. They planned a delicious meal of eggs, salmon, and pork pie. Barnaby volunteered to make the gravy, carefully measuring and pouring.

Disaster struck when Barnaby reached for the sugar instead of the flour. He emptied the whole bag into the pot! The gravy, now sweet, began to bubble and explode, splattering everywhere.

With an earnest look, Rosie declared, "Maybe this is modern cooking!" They stared at the sugary mess, then burst into laughter. The salty pork pie and the sweet gravy would never be forgotten.

The friends spent the rest of the evening laughing about their cooking blunder. Deciding to play it safe, they made a solemn vow to order pizza on their next camping adventure.
